Guide to Natural Soap Making Vincent Bronson.2020-12-24 A detergent is a chemical compound or mixture of compounds used as a cleaning agent. A soap is a cleaning agent that is composed of one or more salts of fatty acids. Thus, by its broad definition, detergent is an umbrella term that includes soaps and other cleaning agents with various chemical compositions. Often, however, the term detergent is used in a narrower sense to refer to synthetic cleaning agents that are not soaps (that is, not salts of fatty acids). Conversely, the term soap is often used in a broader sense to include a variety of cleaning agents (such as laundry soap). Here, the term detergent will be used in its broader sense (to include soaps), and the term soap will be used for products that consist mainly of fatty acid salts. Detergents are commonly used in products for personal hygiene, dishwashing, and laundry. They are also used as ingredients in antiseptic agents, dry-cleaning solutions, lubricating oils, and gasoline. Although detergents are very useful, the excessive use of certain ingredients has led to adverse effects on the environment. For instance, phosphate additives used for water softeners led to an increase in phosphorus content in lakes and rivers, triggering algal blooms that in turn consumed most of the oxygen in the waters, killing fish and plants. Efforts have been made to reduce such negative effects, but the results have been mixed.

Cleaning ability of Washing Powders Sumaanyu

Maheshwari.2016-11-28 Research Paper (undergraduate) from the year 2015 in the subject Chemistry - Other, grade: A, , course: IB Chemistry HL, language: English, abstract: I researched and studied the effect of temperature and concentration of the detergent, Sodium Lauryl Sulphate, on the cleaning ability of various popular washing powders, in terms of surface tension. Furthermore, it was the minimum concentration of LAS that must be present and maximum value of the surface was determined. I researched and found that the cleaning ability is a function of the surface tension and that washing powders contain surfactants or detergents like Sodium Lauryl Sulphate (LAS) that lower the surface tension. Surface tension causes the surface portion of liquid to be attracted to another surface. Thus lowering the surface tension allows the water to spread further and can penetrate into the holes and pores of the surface giving a better cleaning performance. However, these detergents only work if they are at their Critical Micelle Concentration. Keeping the CMC of LAS in mind, I took different concentrations of it so as to find the maximum value of surface tension that must be passed for effective cleaning.
