Job Satisfaction and Intern Supervision Among School

Psychologist Angela Bloomquist.2007-12-01 This national study proposed to measure the job satisfaction of full-time public school psychologists and to explore the relationship with intern supervision during the spring semester of the 2004-2005 school year. Five hundred randomly selected school psychologists were asked to complete and return a data form and a modified version of the Minnesota Satisfaction Questionnaire (MMSQ). The data form was designed to provide the examiner with demographic information as well as information on estimated role function, number of interns supervised in the past, factors that may have prevented them from supervising interns, and open-ended questions regarding aspects of job satisfaction and the perceived impact of supervising interns on job satisfaction. With a 63% response rate, the job satisfaction results of the current study are generally consistent with previous investigations. Eighty-nine percent of school psychologists who participated in this study reported being very satisfied or satisfied with their jobs. Of the 20 facets of job satisfaction, social service and moral values were rated the highest, indicating the greatest influence on job satisfaction, while school system policies and procedures was the lowest rated facet. Qualitatively, most school psychologists reported that being of service to others is the most desirable aspect of their jobs. General satisfaction on the MMSQ was related to the socioeconomic status of the school district, degree of control over daily activities, experience with supervising interns, and level of job satisfaction indicated on the data form.

The latter was the only predictor of overall job satisfaction on the MMSQ. In regard to role function, there was no statistical difference between time spent engaged in assessment, consultation, counseling, research, clerical duties, and administrative duties when working with or without a school psychologist intern. Finally, school psychologists who had engaged in the supervision of interns reported significantly higher levels of job satisfaction than school psychologists who have not supervised interns. The implications of this study suggest that the field of school psychology is healthy and has many attractive components. Promoting intern supervision as a form of professional development is discussed, along with other recommendations for the profession. This book is directed towards school psychologists and other social scientists who are interested in examining the effects of being a mentor on their own level of job satisfaction as well as to future researchers in related areas.

Demystifying the School Psychology Internship Daniel S.

Newman.2013-03-05 If you are a doctoral or non-doctoral student about to begin your internship in school psychology, you may have several questions about the process and what it will involve, and you may even be facing some anxiety about it. If you are a site or university supervisor preparing for the beginning of the internship year, you may be looking for ways to improve the internship experience for your students or for yourself and your fellow supervisors. Newman has used his many years of experience working with interns and field supervisors to create this guide to the school psychology internship process to address these common concerns. He provides a comprehensive overview of the school psychology internship process from start to finish, describing actions that can be taken to promote a high quality, dynamic internship experience. Emphasis is placed on the idea that the internship year is a dynamic and formative experience, not a static event, and that interns and supervisors both must be active planners, coordinators, and shapers of the experience. Each part of the book explores a different phase of the internship, from the first days through job applications and interviews. Helpful and pragmatic tools are included throughout, such as evaluation tools, best practice guidelines, and sample forms. Online resources are also available to complement the book and include reproducible material from the book, videos students can use to practice their interviewing skills, and links to helpful resources.

Handbook on the Entrepreneurial University Alain

Fayolle, Dana T. Redford. 2014-01-01 This insightful Handbook offers a lens through which to view entrepreneurship strategy for higher education institutions, as it becomes increasingly necessary for universities to consider changing their strategies, culture and practices to become more entrepreneurial. Is the idea of an entrepreneurial university a myth or a reality? Is the university model capable of adapting to new evolving trends and a more complex professional world? And, what is the impact of entrepreneurship in education? Through extensive research and case studies from some of the leading entrepreneurial thinkers around the world, Alain Fayolle and Dana Redford answer these questions and raise further issues for debate. Particular focus is given to developing university strategy, public policy and start-up support as a means to foster graduate entrepreneurship. Each contribution explores different perspectives related to the entrepreneurial university concept and its role in stimulating economic growth through cooperative relationships with business and government. As a comprehensive study of the entrepreneurial university, this Handbook will prove invaluable to business and entrepreneurship students and academics, as well as university administrators, researchers and others interested in the evolution of the university.
