Scientific Principles Upon Which Its Operation Depends, and the Practical Details of Its Structure, in Its Application to Mines, Mills, Steam Navigation and Railways The present work is not intended as a substitute for the quarto Treatise on the Steam Engine, which I lately published, but is rather to be regarded as an introduction and in some measure also as a supplement to that work. Notwithstanding the existence, therefore, of the larger Treatise, it appeared to me that a work upon the steam engine, which in a moderate compass should give an outline of the whole subject in its practical aspect, would still be of much utility. There are no doubt many compendiums already existing which profess to accomplish this object; but I have not met with any which were calculated to satisfy even the most moderate expectations. of ImprovementA. - Because it is not the vacuum which exerts this pressure, but the atmosphere, which, like a head of water, presses on every thing immersed beneath it. A head of water, however, would not press down a piston, if the water were admitted on both its sides; for an equilibrium would then be established, just as a balance retains its equilibrium though an equal Weight be added to each scale; but take the weight out of one scale, or empty the water from one side of the piston, and motion or pressure is produced; and in like manner pressure is produced on a piston by admitting steam or air upon the one side, and withdrawing the steam or air from the other side. It is not, therefore, to a vacuum, but rather to the existence of an unbalanced plenum, that the pressure made manifest by exhaustion is due, and every one knows that a vacuum of itself would not work an engine. New Catechism of the Steam Engine N. Hawkins. 2017-10-17 Excerpt from New Catechism of the Steam Engine: With Chapters on Gas, Oil and Hot Air Engines But, to describe, to show how beautiful and how truly admirable in finish and in powers of execution is the modern steam engine, is not indeed the highest, but quite one Of the pleasantest and most useful of tasks, and the author feels that it is Within his range Of power, i. E., to admire and to describe and in a measure at the same time to instruct. With a high appreciation for noble results achieved, this book is dedicated to the Designers and Builders of the modern steam engine, and the added desire is now expressed, and the kindly suggestion made that these two, the designers and builders of high class engines, should join in fraternal association and each quarter year meet to consult upon matters of mutual profit, to feast together and go away with a wish to meet such good company again.
